My sentiment exactly. The manufactured outrage/ pearl clutching about this event has absolutely blown me away.

The amount of fair weather trump supporters and turncoat republicans pretending to be upset about it is the most upsetting of all.

If those patriots went in with intentions to incite violence and destruction there would be NOTHING left of the capitol, make no mistake. I actually think they showed a hell of a lot of restraint.

Storming the capital was a warning. If they wanted to do violence there were more than enough people and weapons there to have killed every last person in that building and the ones fleeing to the subway.

It was a simple "this is OUR house, don't forget who you work for" message that has been ridiculously blown out of proportion by the media. No surprise there though, they treated a phone call with Ukraine like it was the scandal of the century.

Their brainwashing and gaslighting through the media is losing it's effect.

If we had been there to cause trouble they would still be clearing us out and cleaning it up. Calling what happened a "riot" is a ridiculous characterization -- just go do an image search for riots in America and see what comes up, now look at the pictures inside the capitol building.

I was labeled a rioter, a domestic terrorist, and an insurrectionist for it.

I am proud to have participated.... Standing at the monument, looking below to see Patriots gathered by the tens of thousands, thousands of American and Trump flags fluttering in the stiff, cold breeze, brought real tears to my eyes. I will carry that image to my death.

I don't buy those numbers, Trump's speech at the eclipse was shoulder to shoulder for 1/4 mile deep and 1/4 wide with large groups on all sides with more space. Couldn't even walk 5 feet without bumping someone

When I saw the size of the crowd I was in disbelief, I shed a tear tbh. I would say there was at LEAST one million people there, I got the 800,000 estimate from the epoch times <3

There were well over a million of us around the capitol. We were all the way around it - they don't have pictures or counts of "normal" crowds surrounding the capitol to compare it to. I looked at various inauguration pictures and the crowd estimates that go with them -- they were all based on people being in certain observation areas to actually see the inauguration. This crowd was not arranged like that, it was jammed in very close together as well as very close to the building (and on it and in it.)

I don't regret going, I really had every excuse not to go, work, not enough money, too far away. On Monday I requested the time off and lied to my employer about why, because I would get quarantined if they knew I left the state. On Tuesday after work I drove with my girlfriend. I stayed up for two days straight to make the event. I had a front row seat to the capital. On Wednesday I got back home around midnight and managed to catch 4 hours sleep. Then went to work Thursday and had to avoid talking to people because my voice was fucked up from yelling so much and I would probably get fired if anyone found out I went because of COVID restrictions. I don't regret it at all.

Yeah I will never condemn them; those protestors were heroes. The pricks who basically live in that damn building think it's their safe space and personal castle. We shattered that worthless illusion, and now they'll have to live with the fact that the "plebs" put their dirty hands on "their property" and dragged their nutz on their "sacred thrones." You know that drives them crazy. They probably had their slaves scrubbing the building all day getting our "peasant stench" out.

All I saw was a crowd of good citizens getting taken on an escorted tour of this nation's capital building. Good times were had, but sadly, the area has fallen into such moral decay and into the hands of criminal enterprises that some brave soul got killed by the hired muscle of some whores in their bodello.

With diligent effort and an unrelenting will, it'll be a place for honest folk again someday.

The only violent thing that happened was some faggot shot a innocent woman in the neck trying to protect congress from what? Getting to close to American citizens? If you ask me the Capitol building needs a field trip of patriots just like that and it needs to happen at least every month.

I have been watching the videos and pics I took since I took em.

I couldn't believe the way media was describing what I was just a part of when i finally made it to my car.

Yeah, some pissed off patriots, a few agitators and Trumpers got rowdy and went in the capital, most did not. There was no blood lust around me and protest are supposed to be non-violent disruptions, what did you expect they stole the election blatantly and said you don't get consideration suck it up buttercup.

I think i am going to be a full time protester now, we have to exhaust every option before we take arms, history demands it.

Normal guy from TX here.

oh no, we made the people the bomb the world uncomfortable just notice how they love, celebrate, and financially support riots that were far more violent, deadly, and destructive. This whole "oh nooo not the capitol" is a huge fucking act.

Had Trump won and it was BLM/Antifa that invaded the capitol, the media would be praising it even if they fucking burned the whole building down. And likely, the police wouldnt have shot anyone either. Sick evil people they are.

MAN I wish I had been there, fuck the feds.

I've never been so hyped to water the tree of liberty in my life. The following 200 years of peace will be such a beautiful thing. It will get worse before it gets better, but MAN will it be so much better.
